contrast, the goal of the exploitation phase is to generate new points in uncertain/critical/disagreement regions. These critical regions are expected to be the regions around the boundary of the target function.

Balancing exploiting with exploring is managing often opposing tensions to see how these successfully managed objectives will determine eventual success. They are extracting all the opposing objectives, in needs and constraints, to then set about to fuse them together, sometimes in unconventional ways, to deliver a combined business that

The topic describes the tension between exploration and exploitation and the mutual learning process due to this tension. According to March (1991, p. 85): "the essence of exploitation is the refinement and extension of existing competences, technologies, and paradigms. Its returns are positive, proximate, and predictable.

Abstract. Organizational research describes the inherent tension between innovation, as a means to adapt to environmental change, and continuing to do what one does well and what current customers appreciate. Managing this tension successfully leads to so-called ambidexterity. How to achieve it is still a matter of debate: proponents of structural approaches recommend a ‘developing structural mechanisms to cope with the competing demands faced by the organization for alignment and adaptability’ (Gibson & Birkinshaw, 2004; Raisch & Birkinshaw, 2008) is known as structural ambidexterity. The idea is to design units for pursuing exploration and exploitation as per specific needs of its respective task environments.

Abstract In prior literature it has been argued that there exists a tension between balancing investments in Exploration for new organisational knowledge against the Exploitation of current stocks. It is argued that over time firms tend towards an ever increasing focus upon Exploitation to the exclusion of investments in Exploration.

Excessive exploration at the expense of exploitation can be costly, as the tangible outcomes of exploration will only be realized in the distant future and then only with considerable uncertainty. On the other hand, a concentration on exploitation without exploration discourages the organization from pursuing learning and development.

Punctuated equilibrium is the concept that shifting through periods of exploration and exploitation is a better approach than trying to optimize to achieve desirable levels of each attribute simultaneously. Therefore, some worthy questions for examination are: Do ambidextrous organizations really perform better than non-ambidextrous organizations?

An alternative mode of organizing for explorative and exploitative activities is to create a balance by alternating periods of exploitation and exploration [ 62 ]. This mitigates the need to balance the coordination between both types of activities.

Recent studies have introduced the notion of domain separation to balance exploration and exploitation (Lavie & Rosenkopf, 2006; Lavie et al, 2011), which suggests that firms may focus on knowledge exploration or exploitation into a specific

~~Balancing knowledge exploration and exploitation within ...~~

To get this balance between exploitation and exploration, we use what is called an epsilon greedy strategy. With this strategy, we define an exploration rate  $\epsilon$  that we initially set to 1. This exploration rate is the probability that our agent will explore the environment rather than exploit it.
